In accepting the position Mayor Beeger thanked his associates for again honoring him by this selection. Many of the unsuccessful candidates were present and following the meeting they showed a fine spirit in congratulating the mayor and promising their cooperation.

Supervisors from San Francisco, Santa Cruz and San Mateo county will meet here today to discuss the proposed tri-county highway from San Francisco to Santa Cruz. Engineers of the three counties have prepared plans which will be considered by the supervisors' committee.

JOINT CLUB MEETING PROVES BIG SUCCESS

Father Hubbard of Santa Clara Gives Illustrated Lecture of Far North

The joint meeting of the Redwood City Exchange Club and the Kiwanis Club held at the Episcopal parish house Tuesday evening was one of the most enjoyable affairs held by either of the service organizations. Members of both organizations were accompanied by their wives, and about one hundred and twenty were present.

The greater part of the evening was devoted to an illustrated lecture by Father Hubbard, member of the faculty of Santa Clara university. Father Hubbard told of his adventures in studying glaciers in Alaska and northern Canada, and also showed some views taken in the Swiss Alps.

Dr. W. B. Langston, president of the Exchange club, presided at the meeting, while John E. Layng, president of the Kiwanis Club, sat with him at the head of the table. Special musical numbers were presented by four Stanford students, secured by K. B. Towne; also a quartet consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hoberger and Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Dossie, with Mrs. J. R. Fox at the piano. Group singing was directed by Roy Hoberger.

Highway Property Returned to Donor

The city council at its regular meeting Monday returned to Councilman D. R. Stafford a piece of property on the highway south of Broadway. The failure of the passage of the bonds for this project at the recent election caused the abandonment of the proposition at this time.

Sequoia Stars Hope For Diamond Records

Chances for another championship to be added to the rest of many held by Sequoia are bright, due to the stellar work of the 130-pound baseball team. Hatley recently in a game with Palo Alto, established a league record by striking out 20 men in seven innings. But a pitcher can't do it all and didn't have to, for the boys were behind him in the field and at the bat. The final score was 3 to 0 in favor of the Cherokees, so Sequoia's hopes are high.

The unlimited took a beating from San Jose by a score of 9 to 3. This team plays well together in the field but at the bat they can't deliver the goods. Stan Botto has been piching well but its the same old story, no hitters. The rest of the line-up is Botto, P. Parlee, c.; Jones, st.; Harut, 2d; R. Clancy, ss.; Shine, 3rd; Britsch, lf.; Capt. Jansing, cf.; Clancy, rf.

The 110's, although not a league team, have been winning all of their games. Al Peache, pitcher and captain, has been going great in the box with good support in the field, and base hits in the bats of his teammates.

BIG EXTENSION WORK UNDER WAY HERE BY PACIFIC TELEPHONE CO.

Of considerable importance, from a community development standpoint, is the project of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. now being hurried to completion along the highway between Belmont and Redwood City, which involves the placing of 13 man-holes, 6510 feet of main conduit and 669 feet of lateral conduit for general cable relief. This work which is now being carried on in the Bayview Heights tract will be finished about April 30, and there is contemplated another extension including 7000 feet of 404 pair cable underground and 9100 feet of 51 pair cable in addition to the above work.

In the event that the increase in traffic warrants the additional work, by July 30 the company will have expended since their original investment of $77,000 in the San Carlos-Belmont office, over $37,000 which would bring the investment of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company in the Belmont-San Carlos district to a total exceeding $114,000.

This would indicate that, basing their estimates on the normal growth of the community, that the population possible to this district should be over the 5,000 mark by 1932.

HORTICULTURIST OF NOTE PASSES

Robert Cruikshank Dies Here Monday; Pioneer Tea Planter of India

Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon from the parlors of Layng & Tinney for Richard Cruikshank, well known gardener and horticulturist of this city. The services were conducted by Rev. C. E. Winning, pastor of the Methodist church, and were followed by interment in Union cemetery.

The deceased was a native of Scotland and was 82 years of age. He was an authority on plants of all kinds, and had made gardening a lifetime study. When a young man he went to India, where he was one of the pioneer tea planters, managing large plantations in the heart of the Indian jungle for Ridgeway & Co. of London.

Cruikshank as born in Glasgow. As a lad he started out to carve his career. He sought the Botanical Gardens of London, where he became a skillful gardener. Soon after his graduation he was chosen to decorate the table of Queen Victoria at a state function. The queen in looking admiringly at the beautiful setting inquired as to who was the artist. She was told and immediately young Cruikshank was ushered into her presence. She congratulated the youngster and gave him a gold piece which he cherished and held for many years as a precious souvenir from her gracious majesty.

Often he told of his eventful career on the Ridgeway estate in India which he traversed daily on the back of an elephant. In the pioneer days of the country he penetrated far out in the jungles going farther than any white man up to that time. He told of seeing elephants in large herds feeding on the grassy plains not far from the jungle and when seen how to covert they would flee with a mad rush tearing down everything in their path.

Cruikshank would sit for hours with friends retelling of the stirring times as a young man in India. These stories were interesting and were told in a manner by him that was quite engaging and held his listeners to the last. The historic scenes of that locality were beautifully portrayed by the old gentleman, in fact they were, metaphorically speaking, given a hue and color similar to the beautiful flowers he raised in his gardens. The old man loved flowers and loved to give bouquets to his friends.

Around his bier were banded numerous floral gifts from old acquaintances in Redwood City and Menlo Park. For many years before coming to Redwood City he was in charge of the large estates in the latter place.

Cruikshank had been a resident of this city for about twenty years. For a number of years he had been making his home in a little cottage on Lincoln avenue. He was a kindly natured gentleman, and while he had no known relative, he leaves many friends.

The Imperial Valley is particularly suited to the growing of coffee, except in one respect, Hills said. President Coolidge last week sent a special message to Congress, recommending an appropriation of $15,463,500 to be used in the fiscal year 1929, in constructing 9 post offices and other Federal buildings. The buildings are to cost $68,140,000 when completed. He forwarded estimates of Brigadier-General Herbert Lord, director of the budget, for the following: Long Beach, California, $300,000 for a post office building to cost $725,000; San Bernardino, California, $75,000 for a post office building to cost $225,000; Calexico, California, $50,000 for a $50,000 inspection station.

California's augmented forest patrol forces will take the field May 1 to guard the State's timber resources from fire. The 1928 season will find approximately forty men in the field, as compared with about thirty-three last season. Extending the district system inaugurated last year, M. B. Pratt, State forester, has set off Southern California as a new district and has placed an inspector at the head of the fire fighting forces.

The California branch of the White Cross, a national organization formed to combat the narcotic evil, last week offered incorporation papers for filing by the Secretary of State. The directors named are Grove J. Fink, Manly S. Harris and Mrs. S. Marshall Richardson, all of San Francisco.

California's 18 national forests were visited last year by 7,044,518 campers, picnickers, and travelers, a forest service report showed recently. Travel to them has increased over 700 per cent in the last 10 years.

Fear of death threats did not serve the other day as an excuse for speeding. Celia Chamberlain, 15, in Los Angeles, was sentenced to 201 days in jail, in that she was speeding to avoid a rich bootlegger who, she said, tricked her into a fake marriage at Santa Maria, two years ago. The plea didn't work. She received the heaviest sentence ever given a woman in the traffic court for breaking the speed law.

Four skeletons, evidences of murder committed when California was young, were carried into Mariposa last week. They were found in a cave in the Merced river canyon, a half-mile above the stream, by Manuel Lopez, a Mexican prospector, who was guided to the spot by an ancient map. Townspeople at Mariposa, believing that the cave was the hiding place of Joaquin Muñiz, a notorious in the State's earlier days, are preparing to search the grotto for other bodies and treasure.

Sacramento has been awarded the twenty-third International Typewriting Contest for the professional, amateur and school champions of the world. The competition, which will attract the champions of every State in the Union and the provinces of Canada, will be held in the Sacramento Memorial Auditorium on September 25th and 26th. It will be the first time in history the event will be held outside of New York City, in which all of the previous twenty-two contests have been staged.

Both the coast route south from San Francisco and the main San Joaquin Valley route to Los Angeles, and points in Southern California have been completely repaired through the devastated area of the St. Francis dam flood, and motor travel is passing through as usual. The touring bureau of the California State Automobile Association reports that the coast route approaches to the bridge between Montalvo and Oxnard have been repaired, permitting direct travel over the main route south of Ventura.

With preparations under way for the initiative of a Statewide "Save Your Forests" crusade during American Forest Week, the State committee in charge of the work, headed by Governor C. C. Young, has called upon every community in the State to swing behind the conservation movement. In California, the committee declared, American Forest Week, April 22nd-28th, requires far more than perfunctory observance. Facing the probability of a "bad fire season" this season, State Forester M. B. Pratt declared that the special week offers an opportunity to enlist the citizenry of the State generally in the cause of fire prevention and suppression.

Industrial accidents in California increased from 500 to 800 a day during the last four years, and Will J. French, State director of industrial relations, now predicts it will not be long before the toll reaches 1,000 a day. California's rapidly increasing population was held to be the foremost reason for the increase in injuries, as more workers have been thrown into industry, which also has been widely extended during recent years. An apparent lessening of safety activities also has contributed to the gain.

Closing of sixty-one trout streams and lake for the 1928 fishing season in California, in the interests of propagation, was ordered a few days ago by Fred G. Stevenson, director of natural resources, subject to the approval of Governor C. C. Young. The streams and lake are situated in all sections of the State. The executive order, the first issued under the 1927 statute authorizing the natural resources director and governor to close streams so that the fish might be improved, was issued on the recommendation following a study of fish conditions throughout the State. Stevenson reported that the move has the endorsement of the resort owners and sportsmen's associations in the affected areas.

Giving promise of being the most colorful celebration ever held in San Jose, preparations for the annual Fiesta de las Rosas to be held at San Jose, May 18 and 19 are rapidly nearing completion. The Fiesta this year will surpass in size and beauty that of 1927. Scores of colorful floats, fabricated from flowers out of local gardens, have been entered in the annual parade. A flower show with hundreds of competitors exhibiting the choicest specimens of their gardens, will be held under the auspices of the Santa Clara County Flower Lovers' Club.

Lunch on the fleecy fringe of a spring cloud. Luxurious ease in an observatory smoking room on the back of a duralumin comet. Placid aerial ecstasies are promised the pleasure seekers and business people of California by the Ford tri-motored, metal twelve-passenger planes, deluxe of the Madix Air Lines. These air liners will operate on a daily passenger schedule between San Francisco and San Diego commencing April 17. The ports of call will be San Jose, Fresno, Bakersfield, Los Angeles, Long Beach, Santa Ana and San Diego.

POULTRY BATTLE WORMS AND DISEASES

"Wage War on Worms and Disease" is the slogan adopted by the poultry specialists of the New Jersey State Agricultural college, who suggest seven "words to the wise" in a campaign against disease in New Jersey.

"Hatch or Buy Chicks Early" is the first. Figures from the farm survey, showing contest for five years show, that chicks hatched before May 15 produced 75 eggs the first six months from November to May, and those hatched after May 15 produced 68 eggs for the same period.

"Keep Brooder House Clean." The steps suggested for cleaning a brooder house thoroughly are: first, scrape the floor, then remove all accumulated droppings and litter; second, sweep the ceiling, wall, and floor; third, scrub the floor, side walls, and window sills with hot lye solution; fourth, clean all brooder house dry spray and fifth, after the house is dry spray with an approved disinfectant.

"Provide Clean Range or Close Confinement." By clean range is meant ground on which no chickens have been raised for at least a year and where no poultry manure has been scattered for at least two years.

If room is so limited that clean range cannot be provided, close confinement is recommended. "Keep Old and Young Stock Separate." Do not let the youngsters come in contact with the laying stock which may be carrying the germs of coccidiosis and roundworm while being apparently healthy.

"Build Screen Manure Pit." This will partially eliminate the common fly which is a fruitful source of worm infestation.

"Supply Wire Dropping Boards." As dropping boards furnish a good source of infection, these should be screened to prevent the birds from walking on the droppings. A half-inch mesh wire stretched tightly beneath the roost is recommended.

"Clean Dropping Boards Daily." From May to October, droppings should be cleaned from the boards and placed in the screen manure pit.

Gapeworm Pest Spread to Chicks by Turkeys

United States Department of Agriculture, in discussing gapeworms, points out that the two most important items in the control of this pest are, first, to keep the little chicks away from turkeys, and second, to brood chicks only on clean ground. "Turkeys may carry gapeworms at any age," the grown birds showing no evidence of their presence. The department reports that in most of the outbreaks investigated turkeys have been present on the infested farm.

Ground on which chicks have been raised before and on which mature poultry has ranged is almost certain to be infested with eggs of the roundworm. Hence the young chicks, should by all means be put on clean ground each year. Plovers the lots is quite effective in breaking up parasite trouble.

Poultry Hints

Do not turn lights off too early in the spring.

Too much bulk cannot be handled by young chicks.

Early roosting keeps the chicks from crowding into the corners.

Fowls can be culled at night by use of flashlight with a blue-tinted bulb.

Do not stop feeding early and late in the day when lights are finally left out.

Giving the chicks some form of milk at the start stimulates their appetites and promotes growth.

A suitable mash, fed throughout the summer, balances the grain ration and keeps the chicks growing without any setbacks.

Any shelter which protects fowls from storms and severe weather is an incentive to egg production.

Sometimes (but not always) goslings will live and make some growth if compelled to rely on their own resources to get nourishment.

The extra expense for a double floor in the brooder house is a good investment. A warm and dry floor can be made by including a sub and top floor with a layer of tar paper between them.

Plymouth Rock hens with extremely small combs are apt to produce small eggs, it is claimed by breeders.

Removing the cockerels at broiler age gives the pullets more room to grow and develop. Birds of both sexes will grow better when separated.

During the muggy days of spring it will be well to keep the layers shut in the house during the forenoon to avoid tracking the nests with muddy feet and thus soil the eggs which discount them for market purposes.

Eggs from strong, vigorous stock, preferably hens which have not been pushed for heavy winter egg production, will withstand more adverse conditions in incubation and come through giving forth good, strong, healthy chicks.

Fowls in most cases, will maintain rugged health roosting in trees, but sudden and frequent changes in the weather to which they will be subjected in the out of doors will interfere greatly, or in most instances, stop egg production.

Finally Lands Major Berth

FOR some minor league stars the road to the big leagues is short and sharp and sure. For others it is a long and rambling trail mostly winding through the meadows and corn-lands of many farms. And of this latter class none traveled a longer track or served more time on farms than did Lance Richbourg, the Boston Braves outfielder of last season. Richbourg's baseball career covers a period of nine years and extends from Florida to Michigan and from Frisco bay to that bay whose waters lap the eastern limits of Boston. He must have had a lot of courage and bulldog tenacity deep in his heart to have survived failure and misfortune so long and still had enough left to win his goal.

Lance Richbourg.

Richbourg was a student in the University of Florida when McGraw took his Gladiators to Miami in the spring of the year 1919 to train. The glitter of a big league training camp, of course, dazzled the eyes of the young collegian and he signed to play with McGraw. He thought he was an infielder and he knew he could hit. He was also very fast. Well, McGraw farmed him to Oakland for a season and then recalled him and farmed him out again, this time to Toledo, and then traded him to the Phils. He could not seem to get into his stride. He showed flashes of hitting form that lured the big league managers on, but he never seemed to be able to win a regular berth. He was traded out to the Dallas and later to Charlotte in the South Atlantic league. During the year he was with the Phils he warned the team back to the University of Florida game. Nothing in this record to write back to the institution's former star, about and have posted in the Central league, Richbourg hit over .400. Finally he landed in Nashville with his big league career apparently at an end. He led the Southern league in hitting and was signed by Washington and immediately afterwards proceeded to break his leg. The Senators sent him to Minneapolis on the Matthews deal. This was his seventh minor league stand and his third big league failure. Nothing daunted, this game Florida collegian started all over again seven years after McGraw had plucked him from his college campus and played so well in the American association that Judge Fuchs hired him in the fall of 1926 to play the 1927 season for his Braves.

Sporting Squibs

The English Ladies' Golf union has 1,035 affiliated clubs.

Atlanta has started construction of its first municipal golf course.

Los Angeles has named January 4, 5 and 6, 1928, for its annual $10,000 open golf championship tournament.

"Clean Dropping Boards Daily."

A Florida paper says that Bobby Jones is now a full-fledged lawyer and will hereafter keep one out of a hole.

Graham McClintock, Alabama end this past season, will help Russ Cohen, head coach, at Louisiana State next fall.

Horse racing in and around Lexington, Ky., dates back to 1787, when contests frequently were broken up by Indian raiders.

University of Kentucky gridiron will specialize in wrestling and boxing in preparation for the 1928 campaign on the gridiron.

All of the large universities of Japan have regular ski teams and the sport is recognized on a par with baseball, rugby and other intercollegiate sports.

Morley Drury, southern California grid star this season and all-American back, was presented a gift of $1,000 in cash by admirers in his home town recently.

University of British Columbia at Vancouver has raised Canadian rugby football to the status of a major sport, and soccer has been relegated to a minor sport by a recent vote of the students.

S. A. McBain, Santa Maria high school sprinter, equaled Charley Paddock's record of 9.55, for the 100-yard dash in a track meet between Santa Maria and California Polytechnic school of San Luis Obispo, in Santa Maria.

Sure of Olympic Team

The photograph shows Herbert Schwarze, the University of Wisconsin star punter, who is now a member of the Illinois A. C. team, and who is still another athlete who is assured a place on the American team. In the National A. A. U. indoor championships in New York, the Cardinal athlete put the shot close to 50 feet.

Picks Pirates to Win

Manager Joe McCarthy of the Cubs is looking over, on paper, the teams he must beat during the regular National league season. As he views it at this time, the Pittsburgh Pirates will be the club the Cubs must conquer if they hope to win.

McCarthy believes that the Pirates have the baseball timber, but he thinks it possible that the drubbing they took from the Yankees in the world series may have affected their morale.

DIAMOND PICK-UPS

Babe Adams has quit baseball, and he didn't even stop to talk terms with Connie Mack.

Again they are talking about Tulsa and Oklahoma City entering the Western league, this time for the season of 1929.

Pocket McMahon, last season in the Texas league, has signed for a whirl at first base with Raleigh of the Piedmont league.

Second Baseman Ray Moore and Pitcher Ed Tenney have been sold to Jackson of the Cotton States league by Laurel of the same circuit.

Jerry Belanger, veteran first baseman, has signed a contract with Pittsfield of the Eastern league. He was with Bridgeport last season.

Howard Lindmore, infielder belonging to the Fort Worth Cats of the Texas league, has been purchased by Little Rock of the Southern loop.

Steve Plesnik, a semi-pro outfielder of Newark, N. J., has been signed by Manager Gus Getz for his Scranton club in the New York-Pennsylvania league.

The Athletics have one of the most valuable utility players in baseball in Jimmy Dykes, a hard-bitter, who can play any position on the infield—and play it well.

Four young outfielders, Gibson, Culver, Zitelman and Glover, failed to fill the needs as seen by Manager Frank Snyder at Houston, and were given releases.

Catcher Ed Cousneau of the Mobile Bears had the first finger of his right hand so badly smashed by a foul tip that he was taken to the hospital for a long spell.

Pitchers Herbert Rauding and Ed Brayden and Catcher Ray Ahern, all members of a Boston amateur team, have joined the Hattiesburg club of the Cotton States league.

Sam Favonsky, a high school star of Greenville, S. C., is to get a trial with Greenville of the Sally league. He is an outfielder and reported to be an unusually strong hitter.

The first player to be signed by Dick Rudolph, new manager of the Waterbury Eastern league team, is Ray Carnes, a young right-handed pitcher, formerly of St. John's academy.

Bless Schelein and Sam Hija, two Dayton amateurs, have been signed by the Dayton club in the new Central league. President Phil Bartelme plans to give promising Dayton youngsters a chance.

Travea Wamer is the best batter in the Wamer family, according to his cousins, Paul and Lloyd. Unless the cousins are just being kind, the Pirates must have a sensation in young Travea, for last season Paul led the National league and Lloyd was third in hitting.

Rube Bressler, the hard hitting outfielder of the Reds, became a member of the Brooklyn Robins. It is reported that Bressler bought his release from the Reds for $4,000, and got $5,000 for signing with the Robins. And yet ball players are supposed to have poor business heads.

Manager George Moriarty of the Detroit Tigers was the speaker at a meeting of the umpires' association of San Antonio. The former American league umpire chose as his subject, "How to handle a ball game."

George Earnshaw, who repeatedly announced that he would not report to Baltimore and wanted to be sold to the majors, has had a change of heart and is showing a new spirit. Maybe Jack Dunn has whispered something in his ear or fudged up a bit on the contract originally offered.

JACK QUINN NOT DONE AS HURLER

Veteran Hopes for Three Years More of Work.

Forty-two years on this globe, twenty-seven of which have seen him in a baseball uniform, "Blazing Foe" and felling diamond enemies, Jack Quinn expects to round out three years more before he hangs up his glove and quits the game he loves.

"The old son-of-a-gun should last about three more seasons," says this rare vintage twirler, the most competent workman now on the staff of the Mackinn.

"I want to round out thirty years in baseball, ending my career in the major leagues," continued this husky son of the anthracite belt, "and that will satisfy me. For I feel that it will stamp me as the oldest of all the pitchers in experience and service, excelling even Joe McGinnity and Walter Johnson; yes, even old Cy Young."

Quinn's real name is Picus. He was born in Hazelton, Pa., and worked as a breaker boy in the mines. His father was a Pole, and he had the peculiar ideas regarding the upbringing of the young as away those southern European nationalities. Money was made to be earned and not spent, and young Picus learned his lessons of thrift and economy early.

English Tennis Star

The photograph shows Miss Gwendolyn Sterry, one of England's tennis champions, and an attractive member of the younger set. In 1927, she, with Mrs. Hill and Betty Nuthall, was the only girl winner in the Wightman Cup International Team match held at Forest Hill, L. I. She looks forward to another visit to America.

Navy Tentative Crew Is

Up to Usual Standard

Though the Naval academy rowing squad is much smaller than those of any of the colleges with which it will compete this spring, Coach Richard A. Glendon has assembled a tentative first crew which measures up well in strength and stamina with navy crews of recent years.

The candidates, of whom there are 45 for the varsity, are working hard, and every oarsman realizes that with an entry at Poughkeepsie and a chance of representing this country in the Olympics, 1928 is a big year in intercollegiate rowing.

The oarsmen are all six feet in height or over. They are mostly of the rangy type which have formed the navy's best crews, and look somewhat heavier and stronger than the average crew of the past.

Coach John O'Reilly to

Prepare Karl Wildermuth

Coach John D. O'Reilly of Georgetown university track team, will prepare nineteen-year-old Karl Wildermuth, his fleet-footed sprinter, for the Olympic tests with great care. In speaking of his protégé, O'Reilly said: "Wildermuth is only a boy and his legs will get stronger. He is exceptionally fast in getting away from the mark and he still has something left at the finish. He is a perfect sprinter. Like Chet Bowman, he runs close to the ground and his feet are never more than a foot and a half from the ground. Karl does not bring his knees up high and his arm motion is excellent. He runs straight during the race and does not throw himself against the tape like some of our sprinters."

Lack of Seasoned Material Is Cause

Ernest Sargent Barnard, president of the American league, says:

"There are just as many boys playing ball today as there ever were.

"The trouble is not there. Base ball's trouble is a lack of seasoned material."

Mr. Barnard was commenting upon the stories that base ball is sliding to oblivion because no good material is coming up and because boys no longer care to play baseball.

Play-Off Plan

A new system of settling ties in baseball has been adopted by the Pacific Coast conference as the result of complications that have arisen in past seasons. For example, when two teams tie in the Southern division a single game will be played to decide the champion. If a triple tie should occur the two teams nearest each other will play off and the winner meet the third team. All ties will be settled within a week after the regular season closes.

One of the 30,000 California women who cook with electricity

The morning shower refreshed the air. Warm sunshine has dried the grass. It is an afternoon to be outside. Friends are coming for dinner—four people beside the family! And this woman is spending the afternoon in her garden.

She uses an electric range. The whole dinner was placed in the oven at one o'clock. At four, the electricity turned on and started the meal cooking. A Temperature Control keeps the oven at the proper temperature. At six, the current will turn off. The insulated oven will keep the meal warm until dinner is served.

This is the freedom you'll enjoy with electric cooking.

Why don't you eliminate the monotony of preparing meals by using an electric range? You can see them at our office.

New rates make electric cooking very economical

STATE FORESTER M. B. PRATT ADVISES REFORESTATION

Cut-over Land of San Mateo County Adapted To Method Suggested

By CLEM WHITAKER

SACRAMENTO, April 19

Celebrated as the world's wood-cover approximately 4,000 acres of land that can be planted to trees.

for its mighty virgin forests—California can still add hundreds of thousands of acres to her far-flung timber belt by merely lending nature a hand in the business of reforestation.

In San Mateo county, for instance, there are 2,000 acres of cut-over land that are adapted to reforestation, State Forester M. B. Pratt reported today.

And in addition, brush fields approximately 1,000,000 acres of land that can be planted to trees.

timber zone—land that should be bearing timber.

Still another potential forest area in San Mateo county, says the state report, is found in 2,000 acres in "transition zone brush fields, where man and nature could combine forces to produce valuable timber.

In the state at large, said the state forester, the survey showed approximately 1,000,000 acres of land that can be planted to trees.

in logged-over areas.

Although several of the larger lumber companies have undertaken big reforestation experiments, Pratt declared that California has hardly scratched the surface in the undertaking.

Furthermore, Pratt said experience has demonstrated that where forest fires are kept out natural reforestation, by seed and sprouts, will greatly aid in the work.

"We can't expect to use virgin timber forever," said the forester. "The time is not far distant when we must depend on second growth. This is not a state problem alone; it is a problem that every county and every community with forestry resources should give serious consideration."

Every student of the school taking English was required to learn not more than twenty-five lines from one of Shakespeare's works. After competing in the English classes, the two best, a boy and a girl were selected to try-out by classes, according to the number of years in school.

Those who competed at the final try-out and their selections were: Freshmen—Kent Arnold, "As You Like It"; Arline Castibon, "Twelfth Night"; Gloria Grand, "Fophomores"—Roger Litner, "Hamlet"; "Julius Caesar"; Roger Komstoett, "Merchant of Venice"; Juniors—Ward Sutton, "Merchant of Venice"; Valene Barrett, "As You Like It"; Norma Campbell, "Merchant of Venice"; Sam Enten, "As You Like It"; Elizabeth Werthman, "Othello." The Colfax Bookplate
By Agnes Miller
WINKU SERVICE

SYNOPSIS

On a certain morning Monday morning Miss Constance Fuller, cataloguer and seller of rare books at Darrow's New and Second-Hand Bookshop, New York, notices that the first customer is a dignified, white-haired old gentleman, who saunters into the alcove placarded "Medical Works." Peter Burton, one of the employees, amazes Constance by telling her he said $150 at auction for an old law book containing a Colfax bookplate. Suddenly a girl's shriek of "Murder!" rings out in the store.

CHAPTER III

The Slippers

For one instant all five of us, Peter and the three clerks and I, were paralyzed; then with one accord we plunged down the main aisle, Peter in the lead, when out from the law-book alcove dashed the girl in the long black fur cape. Her face was ghastly, her eyes wide with terror. Next second, she and Peter both came to a halt as violent that she nearly lost her balance. Stumbling heavily, she clutched at a table, shrieking: "Keep it! Keep it for me!" and crashed to the floor in a faint.

Peter rushed around the table to her; Mr. Dibdin gave a loud whoop for Mr. Riggs, and dashed toward the law-book alcove. At that moment the elevator cleared the second floor in its descent, bringing down Mr. Case. He at once helped Peter carry the girl to his private office. I snatched up my telephone and summoned Miss Wilkes. Then I turned down the aisle again to see if I could be of any further use in the rear, but I went on tiptoe and only a little way; in a hush that had succeeded the confusion with awful suddenness, Mr. Dibdin and Mr. Riggs were carrying the limp figure of the old white-haired gentleman out of the alcove. His right side was toward me, his right hand dripping with blood. At this moment Ulysses came rushing open-mouthed down the rear gallery stairs, full on the scene.

"Hey, there! Watch the shipping room door until I get an ambulance!" shouted Mr. Riggs to him, making off to a telephone.

Ulysses obediently disappeared. I turned and hurried down the narrow right-hand aisle along the wall, past the shipping-room door, toward Mr. Case's office. Again I was with confusion prevailed.

Mr. Case was not there. On the threshold, Peter was fidgeting distractedly. Inside, the unconscious girl lay on an old leather lounge. As I darted into the office, through which the frosty air was pouring from a window some one had actually thought of opening, Peter stopped me.

"Constance," he whispered, "that's that girl!"

His face was blanched, his hands twitching; he was the image of real fright, far beyond anything I could account for. Badly startled myself, "I did manage to grasp that fact," I reiterated faintly, "Get some water, quick, and then go away!"

He vanished, closing the door. I went over to the girl. Her hat of soft crimson ribbon had fallen off, revealing rhining black hair above clear-cut, small, regular features of unusual distinction and beauty. Her lips were blue in the chilly air. Her cape was slipping to the floor; and as I picked it up to wrap around her, consternation halted me. With her well-tailored black cloth dress, she wore black satin bedroom slippers!

Whatever could have brought her to Darrow's so attired? All the events of that crowded morning flashed through my throbbing brain; Ulysses' premonition of disaster—absurd, was it—Peter's narrative; the reappearance, from our law-book alcove, of this leading personality in the strange adventures in Richmond with an old law book and its unique treasure among prints, a Colfax bookplate. Then I heard murmurs outside the door. Following my first instinct, I flung the cape over the helpless girl and tucked it tightly around her feet.

The door opened, and Miss Wilkes appeared with the water, and a bottle of smelling salts, but her admirable efforts to bring the girl to proved wholly unavailing. When clanging in the street announced the ambulance, we summoned the surgeon; after a hasty examination, he decided he would take the girl, as well as the old gentleman, to the hospital.

So the ambulance sped away, leaving our establishment in the limp condition naturally resulting from the succession of exciting events detailed by this ungarbled record. Gossiping groups stood watching a policeman taking down stories from eye-witnesses, but I saw Peter nowhere. I learned that the old gentleman's injury was a severe slash across the right wrist. The doctor thought that at his advanced age the shock had at once overcome him, preventing an outcry. He had been unconscious some time when the alarm was given.

Of course the fainting girl came in for endless curiosity, directed chiefly at me. But even had I wanted to talk, I knew just two facts about her: namely, that Peter had seen her at the Richmond auction, and that she had had on black satin bedroom slippers; and these facts I decided to suppress for the present time at least. I did not know who she was, where she came from, what she had been doing for an hour and a half in the rear of the shop, whether she knew the old gentleman, how she came to find him. I lost patience at the unceasing questions.

"Is this the catechism, or what?" I finally snapped at Daisy Abbott. Daisy sniffed in an injured manner, and glanced at Mr. Dibdin, who looked at me as if he considered me very cruel and rough.

"I guess we have a right to talk about what happens right before our eyes, especially if it's awfully queer!" she murmured plaintively. "At least, you heard her say, 'Keep it! Keep it for me!' Now, is it ridiculous to wonder what that meant?"

I had actually forgotten that cry of distress, temporarily, in the ensuing turmoil! Daisy certainly hit me amidships, and that time I knew the answer.

"You must think we're mind-readers!" I retorted. "Now, I can't waste any more time talking. I must finish that indexing. Thank goodness I got it nearly done before this rumpled happened!"

I sped down the side aisle to my desk. But oh, my work! Where was it? Where were those neat piles of classified cards? On the floor, in the aisle, everywhere except on the desk! But there was no time for wondering why, or even for vexation. Scooping them all up as fast as I could, I made for the desk, only to find a note stuck between two of my reference books. It read as follows:

"I am ordered to the rear; otherwise, to go this afternoon and buy from two old ladies, whose grandfather was a bishop, his professional library (date about 1840) at a reasonable figure."

"I have one final request. I had no time this morning to tell you that Mr. Roberts has just given Nancy the position he promised her. She is here, therefore; Miss Wilkes is in charge. Would you add to your innumerable benefits, and go some time or other and speak agreeably to my ill-fated sister?"

"PETER."

Poor Peter! He would do better than that. I resolved, recalling the pretty young vision with the chestnut hair whom I had seen entering that morning with Miss Wilkes. I decided to eat, not work, even for Mr. Darrow's nephew; I would take Nancy Burton with me, in celebration of her first day in business. I stuffed all the cards into a drawer; and went in search of her.

Through the open door of the stenographic department came Miss Wilkes' metallic accents, in exhortation: "Don't forget that nice dark blue serge we were talking about, dear. Tomorrow, dear, and not more than eight inches off the floor. That will be all now, dear."

As I walked in, I heard the reply to those observations. It was a faint yet distinctly audible snort proceeding out of the straight, chiseled nose belonging to the tall young lady of the short, curly chestnut tresses. She was standing in front of Miss Wilkes' desk, her height and slenderness accentuated by a bright apple-green knitted frock whose straight lines ceased not less than fourteen inches from the floor, above footgear composed of as many as three patent leather straps, through which peeped pale-peach "chiffon-weight" stockings. The large blue eyes of the imperturbable face above the round white collar stared at me unflinchingly at Miss Wilkes as those of a young baby. The red, red mouth was beautifully shaped and firmly closed.

Miss Wilkes greeted me with sweet suspicion. "Come in, dear. What is it?" "I beg your pardon! Has Miss Burton gone to luncheon?"

"I am Miss Burton," swiftly announced the apple-green young lady in a clear, shrill voice, transferring her desecrating gaze to my face, "and I was supposed to be gone to lunch a long time ago."

"Then won't you go with me? My name is Constance Fuller."

"I know all about you," said Nancy Burton. "All right, I'll come."

She was a speedy withdrawer; we were on the street in a twinkling. I cast about for a diverting topic.

"Let's go to Ernesto's for lunch! I'm sure you'll enjoy it. They have such good things to eat!"

"And Ernesto is a famous local character. He owns one of the nicest, oddest houses on this island. He not only has a restaurant downstairs, but he lives in the house, and rents some floors as apartments."

"How do you think you'd like your work?" I pursued faithfully.

"All right, say," she broke out suddenly, scattering social amenities to the winds, "if you hadn't come to this minute, I'd have murdered that Wilkes woman! I hate women! Though you," she was pleased to add, "are an exception. Do you know about my stepmother?"

"I have only just heard of your father's marriage."

"There's another woman for you! She said I couldn't be respectable! Listen, Miss Fuller: did you know I eloped?"

I didn't know whether to laugh or cry, the girl was so pretty and clever-looking and precocious and neglected and at the same time there was a wild streak of humor in her blue eyes that both aroused my mirth and put you on your guard. I compromised with my feelings, and smiled sympathetically.

"I know no details whatever about your affairs, my dear, and it is not necessary to tell me any if you don't want to."

"But I do, I have no one else to tell! I protested, Nancy, not to be done by delivery out of a receipt of her exploits, as the rushing late-luncheon crowd bore us down the avenue toward Ernesto's. It was like this: Last Saturday I eloped with Brandon Tower. He taught shorthand at the business college where I went, and he liked me, and I did like him awfully because he was so polite and handsome, though now I hate him. Well, some, though now I hate him. Then father met my stepmother at a church fair, where she was dishing out oyster stew, and she thought he looked lonely, and so that was that. I couldn't stand her, she picked on me right from the start—said my clothes were shoddy, and look where this collar comes to, absolutely to my nose, while the other old cat starts at the other end! Well, Saturday afternoon Brandon telephoned me and asked me to go to the rink. I told him I was sorry, but Peter had just got back from Richmond, and it was his first long trip, so I was anxious to see him right away."

Of course Brandon knew all about Peter, and that he was a rare-book buyer for Darrow's, because I had told him. Maybe it did sound a little queer to say I was so anxious to see him; Peter's naturally always off on business. The truth was, when Peter got in that morning, he had been so mad about Malvina, my stepmother, that he just managed to be civil and rush out of the house. Well, they were married, and it couldn't be helped, so I wanted to smooth Peter down a little bit if I could, before dinner. But I couldn't say all that over the telephone, and Brandon got fearfully mad because I wouldn't go to the rink.

"Then Malvina passed me in the hall on her way to a matinee, and said she was going to tell father that I talked incessantly over the telephone to boys, just days. I didn't instantly stop. I said, 'All right, I will, which answered both her and Brandon; and the minute she'd gone, I skipped out and met him on Sixth avenue, and then—' Nancy gave a skip then and there, clutching my arm in excited climax—"he asked me to elope!"

As on a faint, distant beacon of hope, I fixed my eyes on Ernesto's now just a block down the avenue, one of a massive row of stately granite-fronted houses, built ninety years before as homes for a group of New Yorkers who had been distinguished for combining money with brains. Normandy terrace, as the long row was still called, had been constructed to laugh at the passage of time, though gone were all vestiges of its terrace, and all the graceful windings of a bygone era.

Side-walk stoops of a hygienic era were no longer to be wasted on Manhattan island and all the lower floors of the terrace had been invaded by business. I endeavored to listen patiently to further details of Nancy's narrative, knowing that relief was imminent.

Peter, it seemed, had outwardly borne up nobly under the shock of the news of his father's marriage, had handsomely congratulated both parties, in fact, then, under pretext of pressing business, he had bolted out of the living room and down the hall toward his own room, to find Nancy waiting for him in the hall. He had cheered her drollest state with a promise to come home early and tell her all about Richmond, and show her the weirdest old bookplate in a book he had picked up there. He then performed the exploit of pitching his suitcase across his bed and two tables and an armchair, to relieve his feelings, and

Hence Nancy's desire to soothe him before dinner. She had then confided to Brandon-Malvina's latest threat; whereupon he, outraged, she could see, by so much persecution, had stopped short under the Sixth avenue elevated with the romantic suggestion:

"Listen! Why don't you chuck it? Let's elope!"

Alas for Peter's brotherly sacrifice! Nancy, flattered, excited, and eager to leave home, fell promptly in with the proposal to depart for Atlantic City within an hour, where, she naively implied, she seemed to have an impression that this attractive young man would marry her.

Mercifully at this point we passed between the clipped box-trees beside Ernesto's door, and were greeted rapturously by the door of the restaurant by Ernesto himself.

I had known this worthy Genoese ever since my salary could afford him, but had yet to hear anyone address him as "Mr. Sanson," though his gray hair, dignified bulk, and stately official manners rendered him more than impressive. Like a dream-naught conveying a chaser and a cruiser he led us down the wide blue and white-tiled hallway.

"Not for ten days have you been here!" cried Ernesto to me with almost theatrical reproach, pulling out chairs at a table just inside the door. "You have forgotten Ernesto!"

"I never could do that," I averred with simple truth, "but we've been so busy I've just been grabbing sandwiches from the drug store every day."

"My God! that's fierce!" cried Ernesto in fluent idiom, truly shocked, and he recommended frantically the day's special, which neither Nancy nor I opposed, as it included duck, chops, steak, mushrooms, peas, potatoes, beans and spaghetti, all in a secret-formula sauce, served on a mystical but highly important blue plate.

"Still, lots of business is good," he admitted. "I wish I had it!"

I glanced inquiringly around the room, where the number of obviously contented patrons seemed to contradict Ernesto's implication that he was facing bankruptcy.

"My third-floor tenant leave two weeks ago. Lannotta rents the flat!" he explained woefully. "Everybody says 'Thass hotta nize place to live, way downtown. I wanta live uplin the Bronx. I lovea the subway.' 'Nize nize place,' bristled Ernesto; 'nize cheap flat, nize furniture, nize and quiet at night! Nobody want!'"

"What?" said the young actor, "Swelled feet, too?"—Detroit Free Press.

the district, who wrote to me: 'India is now beginning to wake up, and now is the time when clean, self-sacrificing, unselfish work like that of your mission can be of infinite value in setting a standard for the people.'

Growth of Coral Varies
Little is known regarding the rapidity of growth in corals. A specimen of Moccandrea labyrinthica measuring a foot in diameter and four inches thick in the most convex part was taken from a block of concrete at Fort Jefferson, Tortugas. It had been calculated that the average growth of a Moccandrea observed at Key West was half an inch a year.

Out in the Country
A seventh history class, which had just finished studying colonial life was on examination. One of the questions was, "Discuss city life in colonial times." One boy wrote: "There were not many cities, and what there were, were out in the country."

ENVELOPE BAG OF CREPE TWIST; PRINTED LINENS AND PIQUES

HAVE you joined the ranks of the crepe-twist enthusiasts? Once become initiated into the workings of crepe-twist art and you will be wanting to devote all your leisure moments to it.

There's everything to encourage women to take up this fascinating needlework. It is, in the first place, easy of accomplishment, secondly, the materials are inexpensive, and last runs high, and this applies as much to washable weaves as it does to silk, chiffons and other of the more formal weaves. Just now, women who set the fashion pace are taken with the idea of bright printed linens and piques as media for sports ensembles! The novelty of these costumes is that even the coat or jacket is made out of the not least, the reward for one's effort is great, for hand bags, belts, hats and even parasols embroidered or darned, more technically speaking, of crepe twist give a genuinely "classy" touch to the costume.

The young woman in the picture had the right idea when she decided to make an envelope bag of crepe twist, which should take its color cue from the flamboyant hues in the mod, artistic print of her blouse.

This youthful modern knows that one simply cannot be too colorful in dress this season. That is why she is wearing such a striking blouse whose patterning reminds one of none other than gay patchwork design. That is why, also, that she is so enthused with the thought of a crepe-twist bag and belt which shall measure up to the color vivacity of the silk of her blouse.

Of course by this time you are asking in your mind, what is crepe twist, anyway. Well, the surprising thing is that it is nothing more or less than crepe paper so remarkably processed and treated that it is as sturdy as twine or yarn. One buys it at any counter where paper flower supplies are to be found. The stamped canvas foundations for bugs and belts come pattered material, the one-piece dress or blouse being sleeveless.

This adoption of washable fabrics for the entire ensemble should prove quite inspirational to the woman who hesitates to cut into expensive cloth, realizing that she is not equal to giving it the tailored finesse essential to its proper appearance, can with all confidence undertake the making of a simple washable linen like the one in the picture. And when completed, she has the satisfaction of knowing that her costume stands for the very essence of chic, as the mode looks upon it for spring and summer.

For the costume shown here one of the new printed linens was selected. Its gorgeous flower design being silhouetted against a white background. The beauty of these fashionable linens is they look as if hand-blocked, and for that matter many of them are, which gives them distinction.

To accent the fact of color more fully, for color is undoubtedly the "big idea" this season, the designer has picked out the three leading shades in the floral print, which happen to be vivid rose, deep cream and bright blue, repeating them in the girle and cuffs of belting ribbon. This tricolor in many lovely patterns. For the center of the embroidered flowers you will need a few colorful beads, unless you prefer to fill in with French knots.

In covering the canvas in an over-and-over stitch be sure to embroider the leaves and flowers or conventional pattern, if so be it, first—filling in the background later.

After the needlework is completed a waxing process is necessary. This is done by brushing over with flower transparent sealing wax. This gives not only a fine finish, but it renders the article weather proof.

Enthusiasm for gay print fabrics effect is considered very smart, the idea being frequently carried out in borders for the jersey blouse or those of solid colored crepes and the like.

An accompanying jacket or coat is almost indispensable to sportswear outfits this year, and as said before, they are most novel when made of bizarre cotton or linen prints.

Considerable variation is noted in the styling of the new washable prints. A deviation from the one-piece sleeveless dress and jacket theme occurs, if the model include a blouse, skirt and jacket or coat.

Fifty Years on Book

The first installment of the new French dictionary, prepared under the auspices of the French government, is about to be issued after fifty years of work. The task of compiling this great work is done under the supervision of the nation's forty immortals to whom it was assigned nearly three centuries ago. These persons jealously guard the admission of new words into the book and they receive official sanction after profound consideration because they feel that it is their task to keep the language pure. Only about 2,500 new words are put into this new edition and many words in common use are excluded for one reason or another.

Hospitals in India Spread the Light

The missionary hospital in India has a unique value, says Albert E. Moore, M. Agnes had always been used to having rain water available at any time. Recently the family moved into a new home where there is no cistern and so it was necessary to obtain rain water by some other method.

One Saturday, when it rained hard all day, the child was asked by her mother to take a bucket and catch some rain water. This seemed rather strange to Agnes, she said: "Mother, don't you think I would look rather funny holding a bucket and an umbrella to catch a little rain water?"

Article Thirty-Two. Second Hand Play

THERE probably is more doubt and uncertainty in the mind of the average player when he is playing second hand to a trick than in any other position.

Two rules which have been handed down from antiquity, instead of clarifying the situation only make matters worse. These rules are "Second hand low" and "Always cover an honor with an honor second hand." If one follows either one of these rules blindly he is sure to make many mistakes because so many conditions alter different situations.

When senior is playing second hand to declarer's lead he has the advantage of seeing dummy, which usually enables him to decide what to do. If declarer leads low to an honor in dummy and senior holds a higher honor he always should play it if there is a declared trump; but in a no trump no such general rule can be given, as frequently he should hold it up. One definite reason for doing this is to prevent the declarer's establishing a long suit in dummy.

For instance, dummy has K, Q, 9, 8, 7 of a suit and no apparent re-entry in any other suit. Declarer leads low and senior holds A, 5, 4, 3. If he plays the Ace declarer will gain the lead and lead another small one which probably will result in taking four tricks in that suit from dummy; but if senior holds up the Ace dummy's King will make and the Queen probably will be led. If senior can know that declarer plays his last card of that suit on the trick he should take it; but if he knows that declarer has one more he should hold up the Ace until the third round, which still would save two tricks. The same is true if senior holds a King and declarer leads to dummy's long suit headed by a Queen. Of course, if the Ace has not been played and senior's King is only once guarded he must play it the first time.

If the declarer leads Queen towards dummy's Ace in a no trump and senior holds King it makes a situation that requires some study. Senior is quite sure that declarer is intending to finesse his Queen and also that he holds the Jack and expects to follow with that (not holding the Jack, the Queen lead would be improper). In this case senior can easily count how many guards will be necessary to save his King if he holds it up. The Queen will take the first trick, the Jack the second and the Ace the third; therefore, with three guards senior's King is safe and should be held up. With less than three guards the King should be played at once because here Queen, King and Ace will all go on the first trick, the Jack will take the second, leaving the ten good for the third and it is altogether possible that junior may hold the ten.

Suppose that you lay some cards out on the table and try playing this situation in various ways to see the difference that it makes. Let declarer lead Queen, senior hold K, 6, 5, 3, and dummy A, 8, 4. With senior holding three guards for the King, and only two small cards with the Ace in dummy, declarer cannot possibly catch the King if it is held up, because after passing Queen and Jack through he must play the Ace on the third round. If declarer should hold two ten also and dummy have a third small one with his Ace, declarer could lead through a fourth time, in which case senior is helpless and must lose his King.

Now suppose senior holds but two guards for his King and dummy still exposes A, 8, 4, senior knows that his King can be caught but frequently holds it up until the third round "just because he hates to see it killed." This is wrong and will lose a trick for his side if junior happens to hold the ten and two small. Place your cards thus: Declarer—Q, J, 8, 3; Senior—K, 4, 2; Dummy—A, 6, 5; Junior—10, 9, 7. First, try playing the King on the first round, then try holding it up—and you will see that in the latter case the declarer will get all the heart tricks; while in the former junior will get the third.

The situation is the same if dummy holds A, Q, J, and others and declarer leads low to it. Therefore, when the A, Q, J finesse is attempted through the King held second hand, the King should be held up if three times guarded; otherwise it should be played on the first round.

When declarer is called upon to play second hand from dummy he must decide whether to play high or low by considering the cards in his own hand, and by trying to determine by inference what each adversary has in that suit. When dummy holds a Queen or Jack and but one small one and declarer has no honor in his own hand, the Queen or Jack should, as a rule, be played second hand because it would be of no use left alone in dummy and it is quite apt to draw a higher card from junior than he otherwise would have played.

Filling Really Vital

Part of Prescription

It was in North Carolina, where the colored people are looked upon by their "white folks" pretty much as if they were children who were never expected to quite grow up. A northern tells of his southern host, a doctor, being approached by a colored man, more or less dependent upon the physician's bounty.

The doctor carried in his hand a prescription blank, which he fingered hesitantly before asking his benefactor, with just a shade of suggestion in his tone, where he was supposed to have it filled.

"Take it right over there to that drug store, uncle," the doctor said "and remember, I don't pay for having it filled."

"But," came the mournful remonstrance, "that 'scription don't do me no good 'tall if yod don't pay for having it filled."—Detroit Free Press.

"The sanderling spends its summer in the shadow of the North pole," says Capper's Weekly, "then goes to the Antarctic for the winter. After the breeding season the adults are ready to start back as early as July. The young birds pass through New England in September and October. A sanderling flies at three weeks old and six weeks later is off on the long journey south, crossing mighty mountain ranges and great stretches of sea."

MENLO PARK

Town Board in Session

The town council met Monday evening last to canvass the returns of the election held the Monday previous. A big audience greeted the council which was to retire that evening and give way to the newly elected members. After a casual inspection of the tally sheet and polling list, the following were declared elected: Councilmen—W. H. Weeden, Dr. A. E. Harcom, W. A. Dale, J. C. Ellis and Alexander Walker; Clerk—Fannie I. Kurtz; Treasurer—William Ryan.

Before the old board retired, Harcom placed James E. Murray in nomination as a member of the Puigas Mosquito Abatement District to succeed W. J. Murray, deceased. He was unanimously chosen.

As the council was about to adjourn, the retiring members took occasion to thank the board for its co-operation at all times. Ellis was first to take the floor. He delivered a lengthy address saying that while the council about to retire was inexperienced when it took office last December, it had accomplished considerable in initiating new laws and organizing the city government. The members did their best and perhaps received more credit than they did. He congratulated the new council on their assistance and aid. At no time did the old board have any ulterior motives, but always worked earnestly for the best interest of the city and challenged anyone to point a finger at any wrong doing. There was no bickering, no discord and all legislation was passed by the unanimous vote of the board. He pledged himself to stand behind the council in cleaning Menlo Park. He declared there was a stigma on the city, which should be removed and he hoped the day would come when every citizen would be proud of the city which had so much to commend it to home seekers. Harcom then indulged in personalities which detracted from another splendid address.

The retiring mayor, Dr. A. E. Blake, thanked the members for the co-operation given him during his administration and pledged himself to work for the best interests of the city. J. H. Helzel briefly thanked the councilmen for the consideration shown him, and promised to support the new board with all the energies he possessed.

Mayor Blake then administered the oath of office to the new clerk, Mrs. P. I. Kurtz, who in turn administered the oath to the trustees and treasurer. The clerk then called for nominations for chairman, whereupon Ellis named W. H. Weeden and this was seconded by W. E. Dale. There being no other nominations, Weeden was declared the choice of the council. At this juncture a large bouquet of flowers was placed at the desk of the new mayor and baskets of sweet-smelling posies were put in front of the new councilmen. Weeden on taking the chair thanked the council and the people generally for the honor conferred upon him and said the council at all times would be open to hear all grievances and ever ready to assist in passing constructive legislation. He was followed by Blake offering his hearty congratulations to the new mayor and the new councilmen. Ellis promised to do what he could to make the administration of the council successful. Alexander Walker endorsed all the good things said and pledged his best energies for the success of the council. Dale thanked the people of Menlo Park for the splendid vote given to him and assured the council of his support on all occasions. The new council then adjourned to the regular meeting, the following evening.

Tuesday evening found all the members of the council in their seats. A large crowd was present in the chamber to welcome the new members. A massive floral piece resembling a horseshoe in the center of which was neatly woven in white roses the motto, "Progress and Economy," was placed to the back of the council table while bouquets of roses and tulips graced the mayor's desk.

Mayor Weeden appointed the following commissioners: Blake, police and fire; Walker, streets, sidewalks and parks; Weeden, finance; Dale, health and safety; Ellis, light and water.

A resolution was offered by Ellis, seconded by Blake declaring all appointed offices, including deputies serving under the chief of police, vacant on and after April 20. The resolution was unanimously adopted.

City Attorney Whitworth suggested that a resolution be prepared and adopted at the next meeting fixing the salary of the city attorney, so that the new official could go on with the work for if an ordinance was to be adopted later it would be no time before he could function.

The board then adjourned to Tuesday evening, April 24, when most likely all the offices declared vacant will be filled. There are many applicants for the plum to be distributed but who the lucky ones will be no one knows.

STATE ARCHITECT KEEPS EYE ON SCHOOL PLANS

State Interested in Seeing Each District Gets Its Money's Worth

SACRAMENTO, April 19.—An eye for an education will no longer be the price a child must pay, according to Andrew P. Hill, chief of the new State Division of School House Planning.

"Glorious western exposure has cost more than one child his good eye sight," according to the school planner. "In the future, school houses must be oriented so that they will draw northeast, north or north-west exposure," Hill insists.

The building of school houses is closely allied with the building of children's bodies, it seems from experiments recently conducted in the state of New York. Children spend most of their working hours in the school room and lungs, eyes and growth are affected by light, temperature, and air there, experts maintain.

"Keeping air clean and warm," Hill explains, "is no easy thing. Cold drafts on the floor must be avoided, because they are liable to give sensitive children colds."

"But the substitute of forced air pressure ventilation was found to cause more lung trouble in a comparative survey of the free and pressure air systems," Hill asserts. However, he assures Californians that the difficulties in direct out-of-door ventilation in the mild climate of this state are not as great as in regions where the winters are more severe.

For the ordinary school room, Hill recommends window ventilation with a slanting type of window which will deflect the direct blast of the wind. Adequate ventilation depends largely upon the judgment of the teacher, and a careful watch by her of varying temperatures, the school architect declares.

How much education educates may depend upon "fresh" air in the stagnant air tends to cause sickness and undue weariness, according to the building commissioner. "The best most usable building for the money," is his motto, and he is as enthusiastic about the $5,000 frame school building for some "poor" district requires the utmost economy as he is about the luxurious possibilities of the "richest" district. But within their means he determined to see that they get their money's worth.

Expected Home in June
Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Shurtliff, who are in New York are expected home early in June. The newly elected high school trustee will then take his oath of office.

To the Voters of Menlo Park
I take this opportunity of thanking the people of Menlo Park for the splendid support given me at the recent municipal election. I shall always feel grateful for the large vote given me for councilman. I am of the new council heart and soul, and will do everything in my power to aid and assist the new members in their efforts to make Menlo Park a better place in which to live and be happy.

Yours very truly,
E. J. McLOUGHLIN
